PRACTICING POLITICAL DOCUMENTARY

A PORTRAIT OF DIRECTOR KARIN JURSCHICK
For me, making documentaries means immersing myself in an experience. Of course planning is necessary, but during the work process I hand over control and open up to what is and whatever I can perceive. Even if that throws my previous opinions overboard and leaves me with more questions than answers.”

This is an attitude with which director Karin Jurschick also confronts current developments in the genre, which are focusing increasingly on the formatted. Her most recent work conveys this open approach in a practical way. PLAYING GOD portrays US star lawyer Ken Feinberg, who is commissioned by the government to determine compensation for victims of the 9/11 attack or the Deepwater Horizon explosion, for example, and shows the often apparently cynical outcome of his work. Here, Jurschick balances brilliantly between rejection and sympathy, attention for the contradictory person himself and insight into his integration into a tight web of legal and economic guidelines. It is a highly political film, which premiered at Hot Docs in Toronto in 2017.

Recently, Jurschick also presented it at the ENCOUNTERS Documentary Film Festival in Cape Town and reported how surprised she was that South African audiences were also able to get so much from her film. One reason is that questions of compensation are also very relevant there at the moment. “It was nice that the different sides of my protagonist were also seen so clearly there, as well. In the USA that was much more difficult: there, it’s obviously confusing for someone to be a good guy and a bad guy simultaneously.” Perhaps this was also one reason why an attempt to involve the US broadcasting station PBS in the production failed. But primarily, Jurschick believes, that was probably fear of domestic audiences rejecting the idea of a German telling them anything about America.

Jurschick’s film career also began by approaching a man with a very special character: the director’s father, with whom she had broken off contact after her mother’s early suicide. Born in Essen in 1959, she studied film and media studies and then made a name for herself as a journalist and co-founder of the first and largest German women’s film festival, the Feminale in Cologne, especially in the feminist film scene. But at some point, the past developed into too big an issue. And at the age of 40, Jurschick returned to her old apartment, where her 91-year-old father was still living. She had brought along many questions – and a camera as a means of approach and distancing at the same time.

This emotionally intense work with her father was also good schooling for later work with difficult protagonists. It resulted in a film (DANACH HÄTTE ES SCHÖN SEIN MÜSSEN) with a sober precision that provides a counterpart to the intra-family self-reflections popular today. This was also due to Jurschick’s attention to historical contexts: “My father was born into the First World War,” she says, “my mother into National Socialism and the Second World War. For me, what I had experienced at home, which ended with my mother’s suicide, was always connected to the ‘big (hi)story’. I had the feeling I was experiencing an invisible war that had strayed into our private life, strongly influenced by the wars they had experienced.”

She made this clear in the film using a complex montage technique and a reflectively distanced style, which also condenses private history into an analytical view of German post-war society. At the premiere of the film at the International Forum during the Berlinale 2001, audiences and critics were electrified, and many other festivals and prizes were to follow. And suddenly Jurschick had become a celebrated “filmmaker” due to her unexpected success.

It presented an opportunity and a challenge at the same time. Jurschick went on to deal with wars, crises and (above all sexualized) violence later: the vicious circle of prostitution and trafficking in women that international aid organizations had helped to trigger during the Balkan wars (THE PEACEKEEPERS AND THE WOMEN, 2005), the consequences of Chernobyl (THE CLOUD, 2011), or the complex of drones, AI and hi-tech warfare (WAR AND GAMES, 2016). “I am driven by the desire to find a visual form for something that doesn’t produce a clear image, something that is complex and painful. In terms of content, my interest has always focused on systemic questions,” she says in respect to the source of her creative energy. And obstacles?

On the one hand, “documentary films that do not follow classic dramaturgy involving a hero’s journey but aim instead at recognition and questioning, are rarely accepted by festivals today.” Another urgent task for filmmakers worldwide are the new “toys and technologies” that are driving them forward at a continually increasing pace. For two years, Karin Jurschick has also faced a new responsibility as a professor at the University of Television and Film in Munich, which she describes as “fulfilling in every sense.” Slowly, however, she is beginning to feel the “desire and strength” to conceive a new project of her own. Those of us who are not students are glad to hear it.

“MY WORKSPACE IS MY HAPPY PLACE”

A PORTRAIT OF DIRECTOR MARCO KREUZPAINTNER
Everyone needs a holiday now and then, but few have earned it quite as much in summer 2019 as Marco Kreuzpaintner. “For the first time in two years, I am getting to think in peace,” the director laughs on the phone from Mallorca – and remembers how stressful but above all how productive the last 24 months have been.

It was not until last autumn, for example, that the BEAT series was launched on the Amazon Prime streaming service. Kreuzpaintner not only had the idea for the thriller set in Berlin’s nightlife, he also directed all seven episodes himself. “Unlike many colleagues, I didn’t even have an idea for a series tucked away in a drawer when I was asked,” the 42-year-old himself. “Unlike many colleagues, I didn’t even have an idea for a series tucked away in a drawer when I was asked,” the 42-year-old recalls. “Simply because I didn’t have enough breaks between my projects to put one down onto paper. But to use a literary comparison, there was huge appeal in depicting a long novel instead of a short story for a change.” It was announced this spring that there won’t be a second season. But the fact that the series has been awarded the renowned Grimme Prize should still be a source of deep satisfaction for its creator.

Kreuzpaintner is at least as proud of his latest feature film, THE COLLINI CASE, whereby – as he points out – pride is not a word with which he actually describes the pleasure he gets from his projects. He was able to win over international star Franco Nero for a leading role in the film adaptation of Ferdinand von Schirach’s bestseller, and also gave comedy darling Elyas M’Barek a new image as a public defender. So far, no German production has attracted more viewers into the cinemas in Germany in 2019. “The fact that we have proven with this film that even a court drama referring to an historical case can still work in the cinema if it is properly produced, staged and prominently cast is what makes me happiest,” he states for the record. “Perhaps this will give hope to all those who would otherwise tend to be pessimistic about the industry’s future”.

Kreuzpaintner’s view of the German film industry and the public’s taste has always differed a little from that of many colleagues. The Rosenheim-born filmmaker has never attended a film academy – traditionally the place where the first networks form and filmmakers integrate themselves into existing traditions. Instead, he has relied on ‘learning by doing’: no job in film, television and advertising production was too minor, and as assistant to Edgar Reitz he transcribed the latter’s old HEIMAT episodes. The money earned always flowed into his own first short films.

“But then, I had to generate all my infrastructure myself,” Kreuzpaintner recalls. “And I was always challenged to motivate myself without direct comparison – which I would have been exposed to at the film academy. However, being without any concrete competitive relationship, perhaps I was freer and could really concentrate on what I wanted to do without being surrounded by people trying to influence or distract me.”

Certainly the fresh wind – one also influenced by American viewing habits – that he brought to the German cinema landscape at the age of 20 attracted some attention. His feature film debut, BREAKING LOOSE, was nominated for the Max Ophüls Prize, and was followed by the New Faces Award for the very personally inspired coming-out story SUMMER STORM. Kreuzpaintner’s work has almost been received better abroad than in his home country: SUMMER STORM not only premiered at the Toronto International Film Festival but was even released in cinemas in the USA and South Korea. His compatriot Roland Emmerich turned out to be a prominent fan, who quickly took the young colleague under his wing as a mentor and is still a close friend today.

Kreuzpaintner, supported by Emmerich as producer, finally made his Hollywood debut in 2007 with TRADE, a human trafficking drama starring Kevin Kline, which became the first ever film to be premiered at the United Nations General Assembly. Only one year later, KRABAT celebrated its world premiere in Toronto: an elaborate adaptation of Otfried Preufler’s classic youth novel of the same name, interspersed with many special effects. The fantasy fairy tale attracted more than 1.8 million viewers to cinemas in Germany.

Since then, Kreuzpaintner has maintained a remarkably swift pace of work almost constantly, according to the motto “my workspace is my happy place”, as he put it once on Instagram last year. “When I’m interested in a project, I usually think to myself: go for it, who knows what possibilities there will be in a few years’ time,” jokes the director, who occasionally stages television films or commercials and has long dreamed of a biopic about Rainer Werner Fassbinder. “Besides, the next film is always the most important. Thinking ahead – I think that’s healthy.”

So there can be no question of a long holiday, even in the summer of 2019. Not only are cinema releases of THE COLLINI CASE scheduled in France, Great Britain, Israel, Japan and the Netherlands. In England, where Kreuzpaintner has now settled at least temporarily, work on a new series (which has not yet been officially announced before editorial deadline) will begin soon. Just like in London, he recently found a new agent in the USA who keeps an eye open for English-language projects. However, this doesn’t mean turning away from home, as he emphasizes in his closing remarks: “I would prefer an international production that is connected with Germany in some way. And I’m already working on a few things.”

Patrick Heidmann

Born and raised in Munich, Patrick Heidmann received his degree in communication studies from the University of Hamburg before working as a freelance writer and editor for a number of German publications. As a six-time award-winning journalist, he has covered the most important events in the lives of some of the most influential figurines in the world of art, design and architecture. In recent years, he has written extensively about the work and careers of artists such as Frank Gehry, Zaha Hadid, and Daniel Libeskind. He currently lives in Berlin with his wife and two children.
Working together with international filmmakers has always had a high priority for Felix von Boehm since establishing his production company Lupa Film in Berlin in 2012.

“When I started out with producing short films, there was as strong international component on films like the Turkish comedy PIG’S MILK by Nico Celik or AT THE END OF THE WORLD by Dieu Hao Do,” von Boehm explains. “And this has continued seamlessly in the feature-length projects like Ina Weisse’s THE AUDITION or Albert Serra’s LIBERTÉ as well as the series EDEN directed by Dominik Moll.”

The 33-year-old’s international outlook may also come from the fact that he went to school in Paris from the age of 12 and studied Film Production at the Atelier Ludwigsburg Paris after Film & Theater Studies at the Free University in Berlin.

“I’ve always found it extremely refreshing to get out of Germany and travel to festivals abroad – whether it is Cannes or the festivals dedicated to series like SeriesMania or C21 – to meet and talk with colleagues from France, England, Greece or Israel because the views from abroad about a project are always really different from what you hear at home. This starts with the sense of humor where the French are quite different from the Germans, and then there are subjects you can’t tackle in Germany.”

A case in point is the project MISS HOLOCAUST SURVIVOR, co-written by Donna Sharpe and Raquel Stern, which received script funding from the German Federal Film Board (FFA) last autumn. “You can’t produce the story about a beauty contest of Holocaust survivors without Israel!” says von Boehm, who is now on the search for an Israeli partner to come onboard the project. “Similarly, the financing wouldn’t have been closed on THE AUDITION by Ina Weisse if we hadn’t had the French partner – it wouldn’t be possible to do such a project out of Germany on its own,” he argues.

“The other common thread running through our work at Lupa Film is the focus on socially relevant topics,” von Boehm continues. “These can be both in the past like FABIAN, which addresses issues that are just as relevant for the present day even though the story is set in 1931.” And then there are projects which are both international and have a topical relevance such as Karim Ainouz’s documentary CENTRAL AIRPORT THF which premiered at the Berlinale’s Panorama last year or the six-part EDEN mini-series which was directed by Dominik Moll from an original idea by Felix Randau and Jano Ben Chaabane, and aired by ARTE this past May.

“The people we work with also have something in common,” he suggests: “they are highly original artists, each with their very
Moreover, Lupa Film’s portfolio is not restricted to one particular format: there are documentaries such as Aïnouz’s CENTRAL AIRPORT THF, Ina Weisse’s THE NEW NATIONAL GALLERY and Dominik Graf’s WHAT DO YOU MEAN ‘THE END’? sitting alongside feature films by Joya Thome (QUEEN OF NIENDORF), Ina Weisse (THE AUDITION) and Albert Serra (LIBERTÉ).

“I think that subject matter finds its particular form and this is something you then have to work on with the director,” von Boehm says. However, there is no doubt that the documentary form has a special place in the producer’s heart since he has directed a number of documentary portraits in the past – on the directors Michael Haneke and Dominik Graf, the French producer Marin Karmitz, Barrie Kosky, the Intendant of Berlin’s Komische Oper, and the French conceptual artist Christian Boltanski.

“I always try to make films myself every now and then because it’s something that gives me real pleasure,” he explains. “But, of course, there isn’t much time for this in my producer’s day-to-day schedule, although I am currently working with Constantin Lieb on a film about provenance research, looking at how the Nazis robbed Jewish art collectors and how their works are now being restituted.”

In its short existence, Lupa Film – the company’s name refers to the she-wolf who suckled the twin brothers Romulus and Remus in Roman mythology – has started building up its own “film family” because, as von Boehm stresses, “I like working on the basis of mutual trust and am interested in relationships of a long-term nature.” This has seen him initially working with Ina Weisse on her documentary THE NEW NATIONAL GALLERY before embarking on producing her second feature film THE AUDITION, starring Nina Hoss, with Idéale Audience as French co-producer.

His documentary portrait of Dominik Graf was then followed by the production of Graf’s own portrait of the late film critic Michael Althen in WHAT DO YOU MEAN ‘THE END’? and the shooting this summer of FABIAN, an adaptation of Erich Kästner’s satire, starring Tom Schilling, Saskia Rosendahl and Meret Becker. In addition, Lupa Film is developing a series project with Graf and his long-standing screenwriter Günter Schütter.

“A particular characteristic of Lupa Film is that we take our time with developing the screenplays until they are fully developed,” von Boehm says. “For example, we spent four years on developing FABIAN and three years on EDEN.” We produce quite a lot given the company’s size and the fact that we only have four full-time staff, but we don’t want to grow any bigger,” he observes.

Looking to the future development of Lupa Film, von Boehm suggests that the company will focus on a two-track strategy of producing 1-2 of its own films and serving as a German minority co-producer on one other film each year. “We are independent and would like to remain that way,” he stresses. “Indeed, I think that you can even see the independent element in such a primetime series as EDEN, and we want to use this position to build a bridge for other independents to the financing system and other film distributors.”

A WOMAN OF MANY TALENTS

A PORTRAIT OF ACTRESS ANNE RATTE-POLLE
What looks so easy on screen is also the result of meticulous preparation. She involved herself intensively with the character, from her psychological motivation and processes to her job as a pilot and the clinical picture of her illness. She says, “I really had to draw on my reserves,” but she was able to empathize well with the role. “I have to find a core that I can relate to myself.”

In June, another feature film, MANY HAPPY RETURNS, was screened in Competition at the Shanghai International Film Festival. In Carlos A. Morelli’s directorial debut she also plays a highly contemporary, yet very different woman. Anne is the mother of a little boy but divorced from the father of her child. Together, they try to organize their son’s birthday, which ends in total chaos. Ratte-Polle’s great art lies in being able to build this supporting role into a multi-layered character in just a few scenes that will be remembered for a long time. Further proof of her immense talent can be seen in the internationally successful German Netflix series DARK.

She talks about her profession wisely and with reflection, and I sense her enthusiasm and discipline even apart from appearances in productions. She knew early on that she wanted to become an actress; at school in the provinces of Lower Saxony she already liked to slip into different roles, and her talent was quickly recognized by the teachers.

The versatile character actress has never let herself be pinned down. But her main focus, if there has ever been one in her widely ramified work as an actress, soon became the theater: she acted at some of the most renowned theaters in German-speaking countries, from Cottbus, Düsseldorf and Hanover to Bochum, Zurich, Munich and Berlin. This experience also developed her self-understanding as an actress, which she integrates actively into the creative process: whether on television, where she regularly appears in crime series such as TATORT and POLIZEIRUF 110, or in cinema such as for Andreas Dresen’s WILLENBROCK (2005), Romuald Karmakar’s NIGHTSONGS (2004) or the title roles in Carolina Hellsgård’s WANJA (2015) and Michael Krummenacher’s SIBYLLE (2015), for which she received the award as Best Actress at the Dark Frame Festival in Santa Fe.

I WAS, I AM, I WILL BE was shot last autumn, and “since then I have been busy with scarcely a break”. Only three weeks in between time, but there is also her band, with which she prepared a gig during that period. She calls this “having a nose for it.” “I don’t do things by the book. It’s crucial that I can relate to myself.” But when selecting her projects, she has no fixed rules and relies on her experience, quickly sensing whether something is a good fit. She calls this “having a nose for it.” “Actually, I always try to concentrate on just one thing, but these are all such great works that I say to myself: I’ll manage somehow. I can rest afterwards.” She deliberately chose to work in such a wide range of media.

“I could certainly have had things easier if I had only focused on theater or film,” she believes, “but for me it was clear from the start that I didn’t want to restrict myself. I love jumping back and forth between very different projects.” There’s very little that Anne Ratte-Polle can’t do. And she’s not afraid of trying something new again and again. She doesn’t worry about overdoing it, she knows her limits too well. The Berliner-by-choice gets her energy precisely from exploring such varied content. And yoga provides the balance, no matter where she’s working.

But when selecting her projects, she has no fixed rules and relies on her experience, quickly sensing whether something is a good fit. She calls this “having a nose for it.” “I don’t do things by the book. It’s crucial that the approach is right, and that those involved have the same language and imagination to create a shared world.”

In the end there is one small ‘limit’ to her versatility. She doesn’t have any ambitions to direct a film herself yet. “Writing alone takes an incredible amount of time. I don’t have the patience,” she says laughing. She prefers to explore further opportunities for her acting talent, in the cinema and elsewhere. It will be exciting to see how she gets on.

NRW IN LOCARNO WITH 7500, BAGHDAD IN MY SHADOW & A VOLUNTARY YEAR

7500, Patrick Vollrath’s feature film debut, will screen on the Piazza Grande at the 72nd Locarno Film Festival (7-17 August). Joseph Gordon-Levitt and Aylin Tezel star in the Filmstiftung-backed thriller which was shot almost completely in NRW. The German co-producer is Cologne-based augenschein Filmproduktion. 7500 is set exclusively in an airplane’s cockpit and shows the horrors of modern terrorism in an unprecedented manner. Vollrath, who received the Student Oscar® among several awards for his short EVERYTHING WILL BE OKAY, wrote the screenplay together with Senad Halilbasic.

The NRW production A VOLUNTARY YEAR by the directors Ulrich Köhler and Henner Winckler will be running in this year’s Concorso Internazionale. Cologne-based Sutor Kolonko produced the drama as a commission from WDR.

The festival will also be showing the Filmstiftung-backed production BAGHDAD IN MY SHADOW by Samir, which was produced by Cologne-based Coin Film.

NEW FOREIGN REPRESENTATIVE FOR EASTERN EUROPE & RUSSIA

Since the beginning of May, German Films is pleased to have a new colleague, Marcel Maïga, on board as our new foreign representative for Eastern Europe and Russia. Marcel Maïga (born in Berlin in 1968) knows the markets in these regions inside-out: he has been working as a programmer at the Film Festival Cottbus since 1996, where he was responsible for such sidebars as “Russkiy Den”, “Special Belarus”, “Spotlight Georgia” and “Moldavian Discoveries”. Maïga has also been a program coordinator at DOK Leipzig since 2011 and has been advising the Schlingel International Children’s and Youth Film Festival since 2008. Asked what he considers the challenges for the region over the next few years, Maïga responded: “In the future, it will be important to maintain a cultural exchange by making German films accessible to a wide audience in Eastern Europe and stimulating a cultural discourse. German cinema has a good chance of finding an interested audience and securing its own niche in a region with such a high level of cultural education – as has already been the case with French and Italian films, for example. An increasing number of distributors are also interested in films from Western Europe, and German films are often being screened at film festivals. But the television market also offers opportunities for the distribution of German films.”

GERMAN FILMS ABROAD IN THE FIRST HALF OF 2019

The first half of 2019 saw 296 German films and German-international co-productions rack up 45 million euros at the international box office outside of Germany with 6.2 million admissions in 63 countries. Among the top ten films were eight majority German productions with 22 million euros box office and 3.1 million admissions, making up about half of the box office totals for all German and international co-productions together.

The most internationally successful majority-produced German films from January to June 2019 were:

THE AFTERMATH (rank 1): 8.4 million euros in 29 countries
NEVER LOOK AWAY (rank 3): 3.3 million euros in 16 countries
HEIDI (rank 4): 2.7 million euros in China
HEILSTÄTTEN (rank 5): 2.3 million euros in 14 territories
HIGH LIFE (rank 6): 1.8 million euros in 15 territories
MARNIES WORLD (rank 7): 1.3 million euros in 18 territories
BALLON (rank 9): 1.1 million euros in 4 territories
MANOU – THE SWIFT (rank 10): 1 million euros in 18 countries
2ND GERMAN-PORUGUESE CO-PRODUCTION MEETING IN MUNICH

Producers from Portugal and Germany met again in June during the Munich Film Festival. Topics of the event, which was organized by the German Federal Film Board (FFA) and Instituto do Cinema e do Audiovisual, included the presentation of national and regional film funding – including the new Cash Rebate Incentive in Portugal –, information on production conditions and possibilities for joint cooperation, as well as previous successes of German-Portuguese co-productions. Following the first co-production meeting in Lisbon in 2017, the participants once again had an opportunity to network, deepening their knowledge of the markets in the partner countries and pitch new film projects for an international audience.

"The better we get to know each other, the more fruitful our future cooperation will be," stressed FFA CEO Peter Dinges in his welcoming speech. "Together with Luis Chaby Vaz and his team, we would like to contribute to further increasing the opportunities and possibilities of film industry relations between Portugal and Germany."

Following an amendment to the bilateral film co-production agreement from 2015, it has become easier for producers from Germany and Portugal to initiate joint cinema projects. The minimum participation in joint co-productions is flexible and now amounts to only 10 percent in special cases (previously: 70:30). Examples of successful German-Portuguese co-productions in recent years include the drama LOS PERROS by Marcela Said, which was co-produced on the German side with augenschein Filmproduktion and screened in the Semaine de la Critique in Cannes in 2017, and TABU by Miguel Gomes, which was co-produced by Komplizen Film and screened in Competition at the Berlinale 2012.

21ST FESTIVAL OF GERMAN FILMS IN MADRID

The latest in German cinema was celebrated at the Festival de Cine Alemán in Madrid from 4 to 9 June. The opening in the Palacio de la Prensa, a cinema built in 1929 and steeped in tradition, was a great success with more than 800 guests. Following the screening of GUNDERMANN, director Andreas Dresen and lead actor Alexander Scheer spoke about the film in depth with the Spanish audience and gave a concert playing guitars and a ukulele. They did the Gundermann songs proud and included Dresen’s favorite song, "... and the grass keeps growing" (Gras by Gerhard Gundermann). But Dresen and Scheer weren’t the only ones to come to Madrid for the event: BEAUTY & DECAY director Annekatrin Hendel and DoP Martin Farkas, director Yasemin Samdereli (THE NIGHT OF ALL NIGHTS), director Erik Martin Farkas, director Yasemin Samdereli (THE NIGHT OF ALL NIGHTS), director Erik Schmitt and actress Marleen Lohse (both for CLEO) and Fariba Buchheim with her short documentary SHAPES (from the NEXT GENERATION SHORT TIGER 2019 program of short films) also attended the festival.

CLEO was the audience’s darling and received the festival’s Audience Award, which was sponsored by the Spanish VOD platform Filmin. GUNDERMANN was also well-received by Madrid’s cinema-goers, the second performance was a sell-out. Director Dennis Gansel and actor Henning Baum sent video greetings for JIM BUTTON AND LUKE THE ENGINE DRIVER. The performance of the children’s classic was packed with over 700 cheering and applauding young cinema fans. The hall was also almost full for the screening of ALL ABOUT ME which is being released locally by the Spanish distributor Wanda Visión on August 23rd.

GREAT SUCCESS AT THE GERMAN FILM FESTIVAL IN AUSTRALIA

Audiences across Australia proved their enthusiasm and love for German culture and filmmaking at the German Film Festival, which was organized by Palace Cinemas in cooperation with German Films. The festival took place from 21 May to 12 June 2019 in seven cities: Sydney, Melbourne, Canberra, Perth, Adelaide, Brisbane and Byron Bay – one more city than in 2018.

With 29 Australian premieres and a diverse program, a broad range of box office hits, feel-good comedies and award-winning dramas straight from the Berlinale, the festival was able to attract 31,070 viewers. That means twice as many viewers came to attend the festival in its second edition.

Due to popular demand, additional screenings were added across Australia. These German Film Festival hits were BALLOON, MACK THE KNIFE – BRECHT’S THREE-PENNY FILM, HOW ABOUT ADOLF? and the documentary BAUHAUS SPIRIT.

Presented by the Goethe-Institut, the festival’s cultural partner, the program included the sidebar “Kino for Kids”, a specially curated section dedicated to young audiences and families. Schools were invited to attend the festival and to engage with German culture and language.
19TH GERMAN FILMS PREVIEWS IN DÜSSELDORF

Düsseldorf, the capital of North Rhine-Westphalia, was the location for the 19th edition of the German Films Previews. This year some 85 international buyers from 33 different countries were invited to the city on the Rhine for an intensive 3-day exchange with the German sales companies ARRI Media International, Beta Cinema, Films Boutique, Global Screen, m-appeal, Media Luna, Picture Tree International, Pluto Film, Sola Media and The Match Factory. The buyers were given the opportunity to screen 14 new German productions in the cinema as well as attend the newly established Works in Progress section where 11 upcoming projects were presented by the world sales companies. German Films’ managing director Simone Baumann commented on the new feature: “The Works in Progress was a great success, as the buyers today want to be informed about projects at an earlier date. We will certainly expand this section in the future.”

The Film- und Medienstiftung NRW generously supported this year’s German Films Previews and acted as the co-host for an exclusive evening event in Cologne. During this event, the international guests were given the possibility to meet representatives of the local film industry and learn more about the media region NRW.

In the context of peace negotiations between diplomats from Israel and Palestine in South Tyrol, a concert of a youth orchestra of young Palestinians and Israelis shall take place under massive security precautions. The young people do not want to give up the peace efforts, which have already worked in their microcosm.

By making music together they are finding, by and by, common ground – a first path to bridging hatred, intolerance and terror.

Does music have the strength, to build bridges between the young people of different religions and hated nationalities despite the many challenges and obstacles?

Two cops investigate the disappearance of two teen sisters in a remote town, where it seems like everyone has something to hide – including the bodies...

In the Fall of 1992, police inspectors Patrick and Markus are sent off to a remote corner of the country to examine the disappearance of two teen sisters, 15 and 16. Did the two pretty girls just run away from their hick town, or did something more sinister happen to them? In this remote part of the country, the effects of the East German regime still muddy the waters. No one saw anything, the inspectors are greeted by iron silence. A photo negative showing the two girls naked and tied up in a hunting lodge seems to indicate a sex crime has been committed. The terrible suspicion is tragically confirmed when the girls' dead bodies are found, raped and brutally murdered. While the relatives of other young women who have been missing for years come forward, the iron silence toward the cops turns into open hostility. Who has what to hide and why? When the detectives start to unravel the mystery, they soon wind up in danger themselves...

In a big city, Vera (28) is doing a last service for the lonely people in need of care. On the edge of legality, she accompanies these people to suicide. She always sings an old lullaby to the dying as a calming song. Vera is depressed, lives alone and numbs her nightmares with drugs. Her next assignment takes her from the city to Gerda, an 80-year-old woman who suffers from dementia. She is bedridden and lives alone in a house close to the forest. Her son, Marvin (50), who is financially on the brink of an abyss, wants to end Gerda’s suffering and asks Vera for help. Vera agrees, but something seems to be wrong.

The next day Vera arrives at Gerda’s house to fulfill her mission. Marvin leaves the house as agreed. Alone with Gerda, she prepares the deadly substance. When Vera sings the old lullaby before administering the poison, Gerda recognizes the song. It turns out that Gerda is terrified of something and has a connection to Vera’s mother.

Gerda gives Vera a riddle about a valuable box hidden in the house. Only when Vera manages to solve the puzzle will she learn everything about the connection to Gerda. Vera decides not to carry out Marvin’s mission and sets off to search the house. She finds the first clue to the hiding place and discovers that Marvin intentionally restrains Gerda. When Vera tries to get Gerda out of the house, Marvin returns and confronts Vera with their agreement. git, Ahmad, Parham, Kianush and Sinan – five men with different backgrounds and different lives. They do, however, have one thing in common: they are, or were, nestled in the structures of gangs and large families that operate under the radar in the grey zones or completely outside the law. In social discussions, their everyday realities are quickly waved away with catchphrases like “parallel societies” and “criminal clans.” ANOTHER REALITY shows not only the external structures of this world that runs according to its own rules, but goes deeper into the coherencies and everyday realities of the protagonists. In the more than three years of filming, the directors became astonishingly close with the five men. They willingly and honestly shared their experiences, desires, and fears, as they confronted the contradictions of their lifestyles and how they deal with the consequences of their actions.

NOËL DERNESCH’s debut film JOURNEY TO JAH (doc, 2013) won the DEFA Prize at the Filmfestival Max Ophüls Preis in Saarbrücken and the Audience Award at the Zurich Film Festival. At the age of seven he starts with alcohol, drugs and stealing. At the age of 13 he is at the end. His parents, poor day laborers, give him up. A Christian priest finds a school for underprivileged children for him, located in the temple town of Bagan, on the Irrawaddy River, the queen of all rivers. Here B.B. meets children from other ethnic groups who often still fight each other. They do not care. They want to be a new generation in a peaceful country. And B.B.? He finds a new tribe. Even though B.B.’s story is set in today’s Myanmar, it happens every day all over the world. With the global tribe of pubescents. With children who are like B.B. who love their freedom and innocence.

INTERTANGO sees Tango as an intercultural phenomenon and a chance to overcome cultural barriers. The film gives intimate insight to the "emotional adventure trip" which the protagonists experience with Tango. Naoko who conquered in her modest Japanese way a mainly male-dominated position in Buenos Aires to become a Tango DJ. Iftikhar from Pakistan who got "infected" by Tango and started to teach Tango in Karachi. Mila from Russia whose passion for Tango interferes with her family plans. And Rodrigo from Argentina who experiments with Tango. It’s that first touch, the breathtaking thrill of what is going to happen, the beginning of a sensual dialog without words – it’s Tango. If you are ever fortunate enough to experience it, you will be hooked for life. No matter which culture you come from!

Yet, perhaps more than in any other city, here history was made by ordinary men who left a trace of themselves in an extraordinary place.

FABIAN

This summer sees director Dominik Graf travelling to locations in Berlin and Gorlitz for the production of his new feature film, FABIAN, which has been adapted by Constantin Lieb from Erich Kästner’s eponymous satirical novel from 1931. Set in the dying days of the Weimar Republic as the global economic crisis dominated at the end of 1920s, the film centers on the exploits of the 32-year-old advertising copywriter Dr. Jakob Fabian (played by Tom Schilling) in a Berlin teetering on a political, economic and moral abyss.

FABIAN marks the latest collaboration between Lupa Film and Graf after producer Felix von Boehm himself made a film portrait of the director and co-produced his 2015 documentary WHAT DO YOU MEAN ‘THE END’? about the late film critic Michael Althen.

GUENDERMANN REVIER

In her first feature-length documentary as a director, author and curator Grit Lemke turns her attention to the life of the cult rock poet and coal excavator Gerhard Gundermann who was initially called “the Bob Dylan of the opencast mine” before becoming the “voice of the East Germans”. The film biography is told against the background of a region where global issues of our time are focused as if in a concave mirror. They permeate the artist’s œuvre: home and devastation, the end of industry and work, utopia and individual responsibility. Observations and conversations, images of a post-mining landscape, and a first-person narrator from the coal region enter into a dialogue with Gundermann through his songs, texts and largely unknown archive footage.

While Katharina seems to be more interested in picking up local men for sexual adventures, a tender love story develops between Benjamin and Judith. But then she attracts the amorous attentions of the salsa dance teacher Ignacio with unforeseen repercussions...

With the war closing in, Marcel puts aside his dreams of the spotlight for a life in the shadows. SCHATTENSTUNDE

Filmmaker Benjamin Martins spent two years studying the life of the Christian writer Jochen Klepper.Using Klepper’s extensive diary entries, Martins prepared a film that casts light on a dark chapter in German history. Beginning with the last encounter between Klepper and SS-Obersturmbannführer Adolf Eichmann, the film focuses on Klepper’s last hours spent together with his Jewish wife Johanna and stepdaughter Renate. On December 10th 1942, Eichmann rejected their applications to emigrate. The same night, the Kleppers took their own lives. The family’s last conversations are sensitively interwoven with Klepper’s various diary entries. Many of the dialogues are based in part on Klepper’s writings and still remain relevant today.

The year is 2051, and people are looking back at the past. They remember the golden age of the beautiful 2010s and 2020s – a time when it was still possible to experience wild nature first hand. According to official estimates from the United Nations, we are currently losing 200 natural species every day. THE WAY WE WERE takes us forward into a bankrupt future that we may well be bound for.
